EVENTS OF THE MONTH

Exploring this page <https://www.milanotoday.it/eventi/> you will be able to find the scheduled events – about all topics -on a weekly basis taking place in the city.

WHAT TO EAT

1. OSSOBUCO

Traditionally accompanied by the saffron risotto above or equally delicious served with polenta (or even, sacrilegiously, mashed potato) ossobuco is a classic Milanese staple. Oss büs is a local dialect for the delicious marrowbone that is a part of this dish.

2. MONDEGHILI

These Milanese meatballs have various interpretations but they are basically a delicious way of using up leftovers. They are a ‘poor man’s food’, part of the local farming tradition, and use mortadella or leftover boiled meat. The meat is chopped, mixed with egg, parsley and bread soaked in milk, shaped into a meatball then fried in butter!

3. COTOLETTA ALLA MILANESE

Costoletta, Cotoletta or Milanese cutlet. Purists will argue over how it should be presented but a couple of things are certain. It's a thick, breaded veal cutlet, fried in clarified butter, rigorously bone-in.

4. RISOTTO GIALLO (RISOTTO WITH SAFFRAN)

Risotto alla Milanese, also known as Risotto Giallo (yellow risotto) is the quintessential Milanese dish. Although it goes by several names, in English it's always risotto (with the 'o' pronounced as in 'hot'). The yellow comes from the precious saffron, a spice that ounce per ounce is literally worth its weight in gold. In fact, renowned Milanese chef Gualtiero Marchesi used to combine the two by using a leaf of edible gold to top his famous rice dish. The rice has to be Canaroli or, if not a good quality Arborio. Making it is a meditative affair as top-quality rice takes its time to cook. Just stir and stir and then stir some more, but just like pasta be sure to leave it al dente. The most important part is the mantecatura, the butter that is added at the end while the risotto rests, to make it even creamier.
